Notes on Dressing for Ladies.

COSMETICS AND PERFUMERY.

A few hints about cosmetics will be of use during warm weather. A mixture of lemon juice, rose water, and corn, will remove freckles and sunburn; to those who are exposed to the sun, the use of a harmless powder, such as Madame Demorest's Lilly Bloom, which is delightfully soothing to the skin, or Eugene Kimmel's "Perline," is positively advantageous to prevent the skin from being injured. It is well to pass a cloth, wet with pure almond oil, over the face, so as to just moisten it, before applying the powder. As a deception almost every one hates the use of face powder, but good sense recommends it for comfort sake. After the hair of unburnt is done, linen cloths, wet with solution of borax in rose water, will dry the skin and remove the high color. To improve the skin of the hands, wash them with soap, in tepid water, before going to bed; rub them with glycerine, cold cream, or almond oil, and out on a pair of old white gloves, loose at the wrist. Perhaps staying where hot water is not to be had for bathing, should use a teaspoonful of liquid ammonia to a basin of water—it will be perfectly soft. There is no better hair wash than a teaspoonful of ammonia to a basin of water—it cleanses the scalp, it should be used, or some sort of wash given the hair once a week, and the hair thoroughly dried before putting it up. As the curling tongs are so much used in the present style of dressing hair, it is well to know that slightly oiling the locks with glycerine, in which salts of ammonia are dissolved, at the rate of half an ounce of salts to a pint of oil, permed, will aid in dressing the hair without leaving it greasy, and will prevent the heat from injuring the hair. The ammonia, well rubbed in, is the best stimulant known for hair, and will prevent it from falling out.

To those young ladies who drink champagne, and eat cognac on loaf sugar to make their eyes bright, and eat hark to make their faces white, and use vermilion salve to redden their lips, and drink vinegar to make them thin, I would say that the use of powdered charcoal, taken in spoonful doses, three times a day, and a cold bath in the morning, will produce better effects than the use of the mixed popular odors, such as Water Lily, Night-Blooming Cereus, Bouquet des Antilles, and a dozen others, which are vague scents that dry on the handkerchief leaving a base of musk. Each lady should choose some refined and refreshing perfume, such as the new tea and coffee odors, prepared for the toilet. Panna violet, jasmine, rose, sandal wood, carnation (the most delightful next to otto of roses), or the real English bouquet, which breathes chiefly of mignonette, and appropriate to and no other to her use. Kimmel's extracts are, perhaps, the purest now prepared.
